Do You Feel Like You Cant Handle ADHD? You Can, And I Will Show You How No matter what you do, your child just wont stop climbing over the furniture, hitting their sibling, or disappearing off into a daydream when youre right in the middle of talking to them about something really important. Its irritating, its infuriating and youre becoming more and more worried what kind of future your child will have if they continue to behave in this way. You know something isnt right. Other kids dont behave like this. Other kids can sit still for at least a few minutes at a time. Other kids behave themselves and listen to the adults around them. Why cant yours? You might even have started to take all the negativity personally and started to wonder if you really are all to blame. Or worse still, if your child really is naughty, wild and defiant. This is a scary place to be. There can be no denying that life is extremely hard when you have a child with ADHD, and even worse if this has not yet been diagnosed. Then you have the treatment to contend with and the worrying prospect of drugging your child to the eyeballs. But you dont have to fight a losing battle any longer. You dont have to try to justify your family to teachers or ignorant strangers any longer. You dont have to fall into bed absolutely exhausted and dare I say it-resentful- of your childs behavior.
