You may have cataracts if your eyes are sensitive to light and glare, especially when you're in or out of the sun or looking into the headlights of oncoming cars. You find it increasingly difficult to see at night. You see halos around lights. Your vision is clouded, blurred, or dim. Colors seem to be faded, yellow, brown or red tinged. Your depth perception is off. You have difficulty reading. You have double vision in a single eye. You frequently change your eyeglass or contact lens prescription.

CATARACT SURGERY IS the most commonly performed surgery in the world today. It numbers 3 million yearly in the U.S. alone. Of these, serious complications, such as, retinal detachment, corneal edema, or the need for a cornea transplant will claim around 27,000 individuals. And within two years, 30% to 50% of those having had cataract extraction will develop opacification (cloudiness) of the posterior lens capsule that will require further laser treatment which may result in even more complications, including increased eye pressure. But cataract surgery can be avoided.

In this book, you will learn about:

- *Aging and cataracts
- *Cataract surgery and how to avoid it
- *Herbs to reverse cataracts
- *Cataract eye drops
- *Pinhole glasses for cataracts
- *Nutrition for eye health
- *Advancing cataracts
- *How to avoid cataracts
- *Color and light therapy for cataracts
- *Natural low level radiation
- *Natural low level radiation stones to reverse cataracts
