

Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant: Arms and the Man; Candida; The Man of Destiny; You Never Can Tell, Vol. 1 (Classic Reprint)

SfiLF There is an old saying that if a man has not fallen in love before forty he had better not fall in love after. I long ago perceived that this rule applied to many other matters as well: for example to the writing of plays; and I made a rough memorandum for my own guidance that unless I could produce at least half a dozen plays before I was forty, I had better let playwriting alone. It was not so easy to comply with this provision as might be supposed. Not that I lacked the dramatist's gift. As far as that is concerned, I have encountered no limit but my own laziness to my power of conjuring up imaginary people in imaginary places, and making up stories about them in the natural scenic form which has given rise to that curious human institution, the theatre. But in order to obtain a livelihood by my gift, I must have conjured so as to interest not only my own imagination, but that of at least some seventy or a hundred thousand contemporary London playgoers. To fulfil this condition was hopelessly out of my power. I had no taste for what is called popular art, no respect for popular morality, no admiration for popular heroics.
