

Mothers of the Revolution: The War Experiences of Thirty Zimbabwean Women

Irene Staunton must have borrowed Gods eyes for a while to get as close as she did to the pulse of a story so human that its warmth is almost visibly glowing. -- Weekly Mail Together, these stories are a powerful and eloquent tribute to the suffering and triumph of the Zimbabwean liberation struggle. -- Choice These are inspiring stories of resilience and courage in circumstances too horrifying for most Western readers even to begin to imagine. -- The Womens Review of Books This book provides a unique perspective on the daily life of women in war... -- WLW Journal These first-hand accounts from thirty women directly affected by the Zimbabwean liberation war depict courage, endurance, pain, and a different sort of struggle. They reveal as much about the peoples true expectations of independence as they do about their post-independence delights and disappointments.
